Information sheet on the reporting obligation for cyberattacks on critical infrastructure

What is the reporting obligation?

Since April 1, 2025, operators of critical infrastructure have been required to report cyberattacks to the National Cyber Security Centre (NCSC) within 24 hours of discovering the incident. The Federal Council has decided that the amendment to the Information Security Act (ISA) of 29 September 2023 will enter into force on 1 April.

Who has to report?

The Information Security Act (ISA)[1] specifies which operators of critical infrastructure are subject to the reporting obligation. These include, for example, energy and drinking water suppliers, transport companies, and cantonal and communal administrations. More detailed information on the definition of critical infrastructure can be found in the Information Security Act (ISA). The implementing provisions and exceptions are regulated in the Cybersecurity Ordinance (CSO); available in German, French and Italian)[2].

Which cyberattacks need to be reported?

Examples of when a cyberattack must be reported include when it threatens the functioning of critical infrastructure, has resulted in the manipulation or leakage of information, or involves blackmail, threats or coercion.

How should it be reported?

The NCSC provides a reporting form on its existing platform for information exchange (Cyber Security Hub[3]) with critical infrastructure operators. After submitting the initial report within 24 hours of discovering the incident, they have 14 days to complete their report.

Organizations that do not have access to the platform can alternatively submit reports using the email form available on the NCSC website[4].

Fines for non-reporting

Failure to comply with the reporting obligation will result in fines of up to CHF 100,000. These sanctions will come into force on 1 October, 2025.
